Introduction

Generalised pustular psoriasis (GPP) is a rare, severe form of pustular psoriasis can appear in any age group. It is characterised by recurrent flares of widespread sterile pustules with erythematous, painful skin. GPP can be associated with systemic inflammation including fevers and/or hepatic, gastrointestinal, musculoskeletal, renal, or pulmonary involvement.

Calling all dermatology nurses to join us to learn from experts not only from doctors and nurses, but also patient's perspective of suffering from GPP!
